

Professor of History

Dr. Emily Williams

Professional summary

Accomplished Professor of History with over 15 years of teaching and research experience at top universities. Passionate about mentoring students and advancing research on early American history. Seeking to contribute to the growth of Harvard's history department by fostering academic excellence and innovative scholarship.

Experience

Professor of History

August 2015 - Now

Harvard University / United States, Cambridge, MA

- Lead courses on Early American History, focusing on the 17th and 18th centuries.
- Supervise PhD candidates in their dissertation work, guiding research and providing feedback on academic writing.
- Conduct original research on the political and social structures of early American colonies.
- Present at national and international academic conferences, contributing to scholarly discussions on American history.

Assistant Professor of History

August 2010 - July 2015

Stanford University / United States

- Taught undergraduate courses on U.S. history, including courses on American Revolutionary and the Civil War.
- Mentored and advised undergraduate students on their academic careers and research projects.
- Developed and published research on the history of slavery in the southern United States.

Publications

- "Colonial Alliances: The Relationship Between Native American and Settler Policies in the 18th Century," American Historical Review, February 2023.
- "Slavery and Southern Politics: An Interdisciplinary Approach," Journal of American History, September 2018.
- "Revolutionary Economies: The Role of Trade in Colonial America," History of Economic Thought Quarterly, March 2017.

 (569) 936-3245

 emily.williams@harvard.edu

 United States, Cambridge, MA

Education

PhD in History

2008 - 2010

Yale University

United States, New Haven, CT

Bachelor of Arts in History

2001 - 2005

University of California, Berkeley

United States

Harvard Certificate in Higher Education Leadership

Harvard University

Certification Date: December 2022

Certificate in Advanced Research Methods

Stanford University

Certification Date: June 2013

Skills

Expertise in early American history

Strong analytical and research skills

Experience with research methods

Excellent public speaking and presentation skills

Proficient in various academic databases, including JSTOR and Project MUSE

Skilled in mentoring and academic advising

